Penny Grist & Larry Muir, Reinventing Yourself

There may come a time in the life of an artist when, by choice, by chance or by circumstance, you have to change your medium. Let's tell our stories and discuss strategies for navigating the transition from the comfort and confidence of the familiar to the excitement and anxiety of the unknown. It could be a smooth sideways step or a nerve-wracking leap of faith. Either way, change is challenging and talking about it should be interesting.

Monday, September 17

Peter Serko, Change Your Point of View... Change Your Art

Serko will discuss and demonstrate how changing point of view helped transform his work as a photographer.

Wednesday, September 19

Joan Wortis & Don Cole

We plan to talk about the intersections our lives and work have had, what turns us on and what moves us. We find that shared experiences, visual and cultural, impact us both and then are abstracted and processed differently.

Wednesday, September 26

Valerie Willson

I have made a living creating fine art since I graduated from The Pacific NW College of Art in 1973. One of the most lucrative and interesting parts of my career is major art fairs all over the country. It is hard work, and can offer a real living for an artist. I will discuss how competitive they are, how much they cost, how much you can make, how to find out about shows and the great camaraderie of people who become your friends from all over the world.
